The Arizona Cardinals have always been known for their high-powered offense, and this season is no exception. With quarterback Kyler Murray leading the charge, the team should be able to put up significant points against tough defenses. However, the Cardinals will need to shore up their defense, particularly in the secondary, to compete with top teams in the league. A strong pass rush and improved play in the defensive backfield will be crucial to the team's success. One of the most closely watched position battles this off-season is at wide receiver. With DeAndre Hopkins and A.J. Green returning from injury, the Cardinals have a talented receiving corps, but they'll need to see who will emerge as the top target for quarterback Kyler Murray. Larry Fitzgerald's retirement has created a void, and it will be interesting to see how the team distributes the snaps among the remaining receivers. One player to watch this season is running back Eno Benjamin, who showed flashes of brilliance in his rookie season. Benjamin has a strong
