key sources and avoiding common pitfalls, busy readers can keep their finger on the pulse without spending hours scrolling through unrelated posts. Many residents rely on a single channel—usually a group or a generic email list—to receive school news. This approach creates three recurring problems: Delayed notifications: Official district announcements may be posted on the website hours before a social feed reflects them. Information overload: Group chats mix urgent alerts with casual conversation, making it hard to spot critical updates. These mistakes waste time and increase anxiety, especially when a sudden schedule change affects a child's routine.
