Its core purpose is to replace sporadic friendlies with meaningful matches, create promotion-relegation pathways, and feed qualification for the Gold Cup and World Cup preliminaries. For smaller federations, the league guarantees at least four competitive fixtures each cycle, turning isolated friendlies into stakes-filled encounters. Nations can now earn promotion to a higher tier, unlocking stronger opposition and greater exposure. Conversely, lower-ranked teams avoid being perpetually matched against regional powerhouses, fostering realistic progress and measurable improvement.
